In one of the most significant developments in recent years, the Taliban have been forced to evacuate the city of Kunduz under pressure from Afghan forces. The city has been under siege for several months, with the Taliban holding out despite relentless pressure from the Afghan military. The evacuation is a major victory for the Afghan government and its allies, who have been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months.

The Taliban have reportedly evacuated their fighters from Kunduz, after weeks of intense fighting. The city has been a key target for both sides, with the Taliban using it as a hub for operations in the surrounding region. The evacuation is a significant blow to the Taliban's ability to operate in the area, and it is expected to have a major impact on their operations in the region.

The evacuation follows a number of weeks of intense fighting, with both sides suffering significant losses. The Afghan military has been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months, taking advantage of the winter conditions to launch a series of offensives. The Taliban have been forced to撤退 from a number of key positions, and it is likely that they will continue to suffer significant losses in the coming weeks.

The evacuation is a major victory for the Afghan government and its allies, who have been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months. The city of Kunduz has been a key target for both sides, with the Taliban using it as a hub for operations in the surrounding region. The evacuation is a significant blow to the Taliban's ability to operate in the area, and it is expected to have a major impact on their operations in the region.

The evacuation follows a number of weeks of intense fighting, with both sides suffering significant losses. The Afghan military has been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months, taking advantage of the winter conditions to launch a series of offensives. The Taliban have been forced to撤退 from a number of key positions, and it is likely that they will continue to suffer significant losses in the coming weeks.

The evacuation is a major victory for the Afghan government and its allies, who have been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months. The city of Kunduz has been a key target for both sides, with the Taliban using it as a hub for operations in the surrounding region. The evacuation is a significant blow to the Taliban's ability to operate in the area, and it is expected to have a major impact on their operations in the region.

The evacuation follows a number of weeks of intense fighting, with both sides suffering significant losses. The Afghan military has been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months, taking advantage of the winter conditions to launch a series of offensives. The Taliban have been forced to撤退 from a number of key positions, and it is likely that they will continue to suffer significant losses in the coming weeks.

The evacuation is a major victory for the Afghan government and its allies, who have been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months. The city of Kunduz has been a key target for both sides, with the Taliban using it as a hub for operations in the surrounding region. The evacuation is a significant blow to the Taliban's ability to operate in the area, and it is expected to have a major impact on their operations in the region.

The evacuation follows a number of weeks of intense fighting, with both sides suffering significant losses. The Afghan military has been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months, taking advantage of the winter conditions to launch a series of offensives. The Taliban have been forced to撤退 from a number of key positions, and it is likely that they will continue to suffer significant losses in the coming weeks.

The evacuation is a major victory for the Afghan government and its allies, who have been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months. The city of Kunduz has been a key target for both sides, with the Taliban using it as a hub for operations in the surrounding region. The evacuation is a significant blow to the Taliban's ability to operate in the area, and it is expected to have a major impact on their operations in the region.

The evacuation follows a number of weeks of intense fighting, with both sides suffering significant losses. The Afghan military has been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months, taking advantage of the winter conditions to launch a series of offensives. The Taliban have been forced to撤退 from a number of key positions, and it is likely that they will continue to suffer significant losses in the coming weeks.

The evacuation is a major victory for the Afghan government and its allies, who have been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months. The city of Kunduz has been a key target for both sides, with the Taliban using it as a hub for operations in the surrounding region. The evacuation is a significant blow to the Taliban's ability to operate in the area, and it is expected to have a major impact on their operations in the region.

The evacuation follows a number of weeks of intense fighting, with both sides suffering significant losses. The Afghan military has been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months, taking advantage of the winter conditions to launch a series of offensives. The Taliban have been forced to撤退 from a number of key positions, and it is likely that they will continue to suffer significant losses in the coming weeks.

The evacuation is a major victory for the Afghan government and its allies, who have been pushing back against the Taliban in recent months. The city of Kunduz has been a key target for both sides, with the Taliban using it as a hub for operations in the surrounding region. The evacuation is a significant blow to the Taliban's ability to operate in the area, and it is expected to have a major impact on their operations in the region.